On Wednesday evening, February 9, the class of 1917 held its first banquet to honor its guests. At the head of the table sat the respective members of the Young Women Societies Alliance, the President, and the various representatives from the Junior Class. The guests were ushered in, and each one greeted in a characteristic manner.

The banquet was held in the Maine Room of the Bates Hotel, which was filled with people who could enjoy a good concert. The guests sat at the tables, and the program began with an address by Mr. Bacon, who spoke about his experience in baseball at Bates, and the various experiences of his teammates who were present. He then proceeded to discuss the importance of baseball and its role in the development of men. He emphasized the importance of teamwork and the role of the coach in guiding the team towards success. The speech was enthusiastically received by the audience, who were deeply moved by the speaker's words.

The next speaker was Mr. Ralston, who introduced Mr. Bacon to the audience. Mr. Bacon then gave a speech about his experiences in baseball at Bates, and how it had shaped his character. He emphasized the importance of discipline and hard work in the development of a player.

The program then continued with a variety of musical performances, including a quartet that displayed the talents of the students. The music was well-received, and the audience enjoyed the performances.

Finally, the banquet came to a close with a toast to the future of Bates and its students. The guests were given a chance to express their thoughts and wishes for the students and the college, and the evening ended on a high note. The guests departed, but the memory of the evening would stay with them for a long time to come.

AN OPPORTUNITY

It has been said that Opportunity knocks but once and then is gone forever, like a pretty spirit that one may well desire to possess, but which, for an incised waste of public money in the far-off world that is justifying the killing of innocent women to wholesale murder, and war ethics drums of Europe are luring combatants says of the contests:

CONTRASTING THE YEARS

Fifty Years Ago

1860-1875

Fifty years ago it would have been a remarkable achievment for a man to live to be eighty years old; today one achievement is to reach the age of seventy. The difference is due to the fact that the older generation had a more rigorous way of life, while the younger generation places more importance on health and exercise. The older generation also had a different perspective on life, with a greater emphasis on hard work and survival, while the younger generation places more importance on personal fulfillment and happiness. The older generation also had a different attitude towards authority, with a greater emphasis on obedience and conformity, while the younger generation places more importance on individuality and autonomy. The older generation also had a different attitude towards education, with a greater emphasis on rote memorization and repetition, while the younger generation places more importance on critical thinking and problem-solving. The older generation also had a different attitude towards family, with a greater emphasis on tradition and loyalty, while the younger generation places more importance on personal choice and individuality. The older generation also had a different attitude towards religion, with a greater emphasis on faith and belief, while the younger generation places more importance on reason and evidence. The older generation also had a different attitude towards government, with a greater emphasis on hierarchy and control, while the younger generation places more importance on representation and participation. The older generation also had a different attitude towards science, with a greater emphasis on experimentation and observation, while the younger generation places more importance on theory and abstraction. The older generation also had a different attitude towards technology, with a greater emphasis on manual labor and craft, while the younger generation places more importance on automation and mechanization. The older generation also had a different attitude towards art, with a greater emphasis on realism and detail, while the younger generation places more importance on abstraction and expression. The older generation also had a different attitude towards music, with a greater emphasis on tradition and harmony, while the younger generation places more importance on innovation and experimentation. The older generation also had a different attitude towards philosophy, with a greater emphasis on wisdom and knowledge, while the younger generation places more importance on critical thinking and analysis. The older generation also had a different attitude towards medicine, with a greater emphasis on diagnosis and treatment, while the younger generation places more importance on prevention and wellness. The older generation also had a different attitude towards law, with a greater emphasis on justice and punishment, while the younger generation places more importance on fairness and equality. The older generation also had a different attitude towards politics, with a greater emphasis on stability and order, while the younger generation places more importance on change and progress. The older generation also had a different attitude towards sports, with a greater emphasis on physicality and endurance, while the younger generation places more importance on skill and strategy. The older generation also had a different attitude towards food, with a greater emphasis on tradition and culture, while the younger generation places more importance on nutrition and health. The older generation also had a different attitude towards fashion, with a greater emphasis on practicality and function, while the younger generation places more importance on style and aesthetics. Y. M. C. A.

At the meeting of the Y. M. C. A., February 8th, several new officers were elected, including Miss Frances Stoeckle of the Bates women's organization, who was elected president of the society. The meeting was held in the Bowdoin gymnasium.

Miss Frances Stoeckle, who is an active member of the society, addressed the group on the subject of the Y. M. C. A.'s work in connection with college life. She emphasized the importance of having a Y. M. C. A. on the campus and suggested ways in which the society could be more effective in its work.

The meeting was conducted in an informal manner, with discussion on various topics of interest to the members. The meeting adjourned after the work for the evening was completed.

The society has made many contributions to the college community, including the organization of social and cultural activities, and the provision of a forum for discussion of important issues. The society is an important source of support for the college, and its members play an active role in the college community.

The next meeting of the society will be held on February 22nd, at which time the work for the evening will be completed. The meeting will be held in the Bowdoin gymnasium.

We encourage all members of the society to attend the meetings and to participate in the work of the society. The society is an important part of the college community, and its members play an active role in its activities. We look forward to seeing you at the next meeting.
