LAW SCHOOL

11 Asburton Place, Boston, in June. It is in many of the schools in the state to give the student such training in the principles of law and such equipment in the techniques of the profession that he can prepare for his practice without pausing. The complete set for the LL.B. degree occupies about one year and one third of the time. Those who have received this degree from the state bar school or any other school of law of the degree of the LL.B. will be accepted on the completion of a year's residence attended under the law school of the state. Law school scholarships ($60 per year) are awarded to all graduates.
