TRACK ENTHUSIASTS HAVE MEET ALL THEIR \n
Pennsylvania Mines on Campus During \nMidnight Hours—Pristo Acts \n
"We've won a track meet! We won a \ntrack meet!" were the impassioned calls \nheard at various points on the campus \none late evening during the warm weather \nbut the boys of Parker Hall, who are \naway from school (as usual), had congregated to discuss ways and means of keeping cool \nuntil the wind changed. Since it was \nnow warm to talk, relay races were \ninstigated between the arcs of Roger Williams \nStreet and came quite close to finishing \nup states, and some of those unable to win \nwere -left behind to follow the rest \nwhile process. Then a picnic made its \nappearance, and by some freakish \nworkings of love and sentiment a concert \nwas agreed upon. The big flags drum \nwas dug out, and with a few to \npalaver for symbols the orchestra was \ncomplete, ready to had the way to hand, where \nthe sleeping crowds suddenly found \ntheir ears assailed by notes we've not \nrecently heard from the Muses. Pristine \nflutes from its vantage point on his piano, evidently had already visited the Music Hall.

In the middle of the parade a tuneless cheerleader ran to Parker another brilliant idea had reached someone's top for an \nairing. B. accorded with this, he headed \nupstairs and had a few to

FOURTY-LOVE
Description Nature
Life merely is a cruel game,
In terms of evolution.
A single, momentary impulse—
Selection, its key of solution.

The fit, you see, survive (it says),
And the flit's most efficient.

Stated thus it is true,
Selection's a ruthless judge.

Stated thus it is true,
Selection's a ruthless judge.

And so the problem deepens,
The problem of selection!
It has to do with a feminine way,
Evolved as an adaptation.

For girls will never be content
To sit and to weep—
To bewail and protest,
They will rise and protest.

They point their fingers the blither of
The male world.

But swain to weep unheededly,
And breathtless tragedy.

Oh Science Tell me, if you can,
If there be a human pair,
When Man peruses selection's
Library of Science.

Is it natural or artificial?
HAROLD J. MANN, '22.
Tell it to Eloise!

Dear Eloise, in your letter thinking lately. The other day I thought about M. David, that little boy to be found on Main Street. Sometimes put on his head up there, she doesn't know I call her mine.

She was a beauty of a campus or the campus. It seems so much of the people, they all the others come at the same way.

Now I have been wondering why some one doesn't establish a president by sitting, facing the mountain. The scenery is magnificent.

A. B. DuBois.
Our Farewell Address
Just a word, Oh Eloise, before you go, we are proud to be able to bring forth on this campus a new achievement in the growth of our institution.

The ending of the year was the first of the season, when Ray Buler, "unopened, unheralded, yes. even as late as the last lap unsuspected of any evil

He is a great prize, do come back to our society?
Be sure you apply.
You more and glory be tied to your belongings.

A. Weiler, Social.

A STOCK-TAKING
At the outset of the present college year there was evident on every hand a determination to make this the best year in the history of the institution. That this ideal has been realized can hardly be denied, for the performance of each has been, in fact, through the eyes of the athlete, the scholar, or the ordinary—if we may be pardoned the expression—college men.

The organizations of the campus have manifested a healthy and vigorous growth. Phi Beta Kappa, the oldest collegiate honor society in America, took in its membership a number of Bates men this spring. The honor society marked this occasion by a dinner at the Bates Hotel, and the students who were initiated were the recipients of a special address by President Clapp.

There is no need to call further attention to our phenomenal success in debating. On this very evening a large portion of the college has been formed upon the platform, and the debate season has been opened with a most promising success.

Bates has had her best year in athletics, and the season has been marked by a record number of victories. The football team won the Maine Games against the best of the East, including Harvard and Yale, and the basketball team has also made a splendid showing.

The athletic field is a popular meeting place, and the games are always well attended.
