OXFORD DEBATE SPEAKS BEFORE POLITICS CLUB
Addresses Student Body In Chapel—Makes Very Favorable Impression
Mr. Kenneth M. Lindsay, graduate of Worcester College Oxford and member of the debating team which came to the college November 19th before an open meeting of the Politics Club at Harvard Hall. His subject was the "Workers' Educational Forces." Mr. Robert Wade "28," president of the club, introduced the group. Those who attended the meeting were apparently unalike. Mr. Lindsay sat upon the edge of the platform and moved his legs.

In speaking of the Workers' Educational movement, he told of its start at Oxford and its spread to other formerly non-communist colleges and universities. He cited the progress of the movement in this country at Anacost, Byers-
"house," he said, "professors are forced to study working men's books and conducting splendid classes among the laboring group. 'I have explained that Workers' Education was not set to teach the laboring classes trade but to give them an insight into government, a knowledge of economics, and to teach them to be a leader for the living. 'The men,' he said, 'brought to this great movement all over the world and this movement is the labor movement. It has a platform upon which the South Wales miners, the British shipwright, Mr. H. J. Wells may stand without conflict.'"

Mr. Lindsay was careful to make no discussion but to create an interest. He spoke of the connection between this movement and the American movement. He asked for an evening of American method.
