Dr. Mathews is
Chase Speaker

Lecture on "Moral Task of Rising Generation"

"If we were only as good as we want our children to be, a dreadful world would we live in," said Dr. Mathews, the first George Colby Chase speaker for Bates, in his lecture on the "Moral Task of the Rising Generation." He made the point that "to realize a moral task," one must confront one's own shortcomings and be willing to make changes, no matter how difficult. He emphasized the importance of art and science in shaping the future, and the need for a balance between the two. "In this age of the Superman," he said, "we need to seek the Superman in the soul of each of us." He concluded by urging students to "think big, act big, and be the best we can be." The lecture was well received by the audience of students and faculty, who were inspired by Dr. Mathews' words.

When the sun goes down

More than 350,000,000 incandescent lamps, with a combined light of nine billion candlepower, make streets, stores, and homes brighter than ever before.

In bungalow or mansion, workshop or factory, dormitory or auditorium, there is no excuse for poor illumination. We have cheaper and better lighting in the electric lamp than ever before; for we have new incandescent lamps that give as much as 1,115 candlepower-hours of light with the carbon-filament lamps of today. The new lamps now bought by the millions:

The General Electric Company, the largest manufacturer of incandescent electric lamps, holds patents covering the design and manufacture of all lamps and lamp parts in the United States. The General Electric Company seeks to cheaper and better light for all the world, not only for the few, but to help in the conservation of our valuable electric energy.

Not only more light, but correctly applied light, is the order of the day. The electric lamp, with its flameless yet highly concentrated light source, is a great aid to the health of both home and business.

It is controlled light—safe light. And illumination becomes an exact science.

During college days and in after life, correct lighting is of the greatest importance to the college man and woman. Good lighting is the worthy handmaiden of culture and progress.
