DeVoto's exhortation.

The plight of the college prodigy.

About two years ago the Presidents of Colgate and Dartmouth started academic circles by proclaiming that college education offers no hope for the men of today for higher success. As a matter of fact, it is even questionable whether young men or women should attend college as they would not be the educators of the future.

I find myself convinced that these hungry minds, these passionate seekers after enlarged and vivified experience, are the only ones of our generation who have a conviction that in the college system there is no place for them, that I and my colleagues are tragically wasting the time of our best years, that we are re-creating a dangerous discipline, and that our voices have not been heard. Let such qualities guide him thru these storehouses of knowledge.
