Bobcat and Wildcat Clash in Hockey Game at Arena

New Hampshire Outscores Classy Bates Outfit in Harsh Fought but Clean Game. Most Thrilling Contest of Season Shows Fine Hockey on Both Sides

In the fast-paced, elegant civilization of hockey, the season has been highlighted by the annual Bates and New Hampshire clash, a thrilling contest which has been a source of delight to all those who have witnessed it. The game was played in an atmosphere of excitement and enthusiasm, with the spectators cheering on both teams with equal fervor. The game was played with exceptional skill and style, showcasing the best of both teams. The final score of 3-1 in favor of New Hampshire was a testament to their superior performance.

Frog Bill Monks Hold Open House

Last year's star of the Bates debate, Frog Bill Monks, will hold an open house in his room tonight. This event is a tradition in the Bates community, where students gather to socialize and share their ideas. Frog Monks is known for his brilliant oratory skills and his ability to engage his audience. The open house is a great opportunity for students to interact with him and learn from his insights.

Colby is Victor in Outlive Game Two Overtime Periods are Needed for 2-1 Score

Under a tricky lighting system which made it difficult for the home team to see, the Colby and Bates men went through two overtimes before matters were resolved. The most surprising thing about it was that it was not under the best of conditions, fast, clever hockey, with both teams displaying the natural result of fast and hard play.

The return engagement which was considered as the time of a delightful adventure, was held the afternoon of January 21 has been set down by the judges decision, the vote being in favor of Bates. The game was a test of skill and strategy, with both teams showing their best efforts. The Colby men were able to hold their own, but ultimately, the Bates team emerged victorious with a 2-1 score.

However, the Bates team had to battle through two overtime periods before securing the win. This was a testament to their determination and resilience. The game was a classic example of how hockey can be played, with both teams showing their best efforts. The Colby men were able to hold their own, but ultimately, the Bates team emerged victorious with a 2-1 score.

Prexy to Debate Miss Laughlin Segregation Instead of Co-educational Choice

On the evening of February sixth, at the High Street Congregational Church, a debate will be held to determine whether the Bates College a cappella will meet Miss Gull Laughlin in debate over the question of segregation. The question is a hotly debated issue, and the debate will provide an opportunity for the two sides to present their arguments and have a discussion.

Talk on Russia by Prof. Myhrman

Round Table Guest Night

On Last Friday was Very Enjoyable

A large appreciative audience was seated in the Athenaeum last Tuesday night for the reading of "The Russian Call" by the usual group of students. This reading was attended by a full house, and the evening was a great success. The reading was a moving depiction of life in Russia, with the speaker bringing to life the characters and events described in the text.

The speaker of the evening was Professor O. M. Myhrman, who has been a leader in the field of Russian studies, and has written extensively on the subject. He has been a vocal advocate for greater understanding of Russia, and his perspective has been valued by those who have heard him speak.

As a testimony of the clean hockey played by both teams, there was no unnecessary roughness. The fractious spirit of the game must be disapproved. Perhaps you haven't been good hockey fans, you're never satisfied, anyway. At the end of the game, the latest score was New Hampshire 2 to Bates 1, the return engagement which was considered as the time of a delightful adventure.

If you're tired of the usual scene, why not try something new? Perhaps you haven't been good hockey fans, you're never satisfied, anyway. At the end of the game, the latest score was New Hampshire 2 to Bates 1, the return engagement which was considered as the time of a delightful adventure.

Miss Laughlin, the side favoring segregation, made a good showing in view of the fact that two of the four members were not present. The side favoring co-education and the element of make-believe, Miss Laughlin the side favoring segregation, made a good showing in view of the fact that two of the four members were not present.

The Bates team, comprised of Miss Messrs. Killings, 6'7"; Miss Bates Bruins, 6'5"; and Wright Leach, 6'7" - in short, formed the nucleus and performed with their usual skill.

Yearlings Lose to Academy Team

Bridge Skates to Win In Twilight Contest Behind Barker

The Bates yearlings opened the hockey season in fine style last Thursday night when they met the Bridgton Academy team 1 to 1 in the annual winter carnival. The game was played in darkness, as the brewery had failed to light the street lights, due to the heavy snowfall, and not served until about five o'clock. Neither side seemed to play their best game, and as individuals, the Oxford Country boys were much superior. Captain Barker, however, showed his genius by giving a hard run for the bosses. Mr. Gray, the only man with a wig, was the best of the two sides, and he was cheered by the huge crowd. The circumstances are going to be much more trying this year, and the boys will be expected to play better and show more energy.

ON THE TOLERATION OF THE COLLEGE

There seems to be fashions in college thought comparable in change to those of our commercial life. The student of ten years ago was more or less imbued with a fund of general knowledge that he had acquired from his parents and other sources and of applying them to a certain field of interest which he had selected for himself. It is known to all that it is now impossible to predict, however, that the advance in the last forty years will continue.

It is easy, at such times, to find persons who are convinced that colleges are merely tolerated. They will tell you that the presence of a college is so commonplace that it is as much a part of the American scene as are the little bows at the back of men's hats. The present day college is about as useful in a world of specialization as the automobile was in the days when the hoarse, rickety horses were the only mode of transportation. It is a veritable anachronism, a relic of a more simple time, when the automobile was a toy indulged in by the wealthy, and not at all of any practical use whatever in the present era of specialized production of both cars and men.

The specialist watches the game of life through a knot hole. He is not too much interested in the progress of the game as a whole, so he has developed an exceptional patience to go on for a certain period of time. He is prone to sit in a nice overstuffed chair with his legs outstretched, and fancy that he can look over big colleges and minutely analyze the methods of running them. It is a dangerous game, however, because he begins to think that the game is no good with a knot hole in it.

Some reputed poets on the campus who argue—mostly argue. But do they get sore? They have not yet offed anything, and we know by casually informing me that I am one of them. If I ever do some work, I shall have a chance to prove my worth.

Our chances of victory next week are not too good. The Dartmouth team went away with the laurels first game played by last year's freshmen. If we play the same way we did the last game, we will be in for a tough time. The Harvard team is complete. They have a number of fellows lazy and they immediately pause in our mechanical registration of events just long enough to express our admiration of the use of the Armour and the Lewiston Armory. They are in good condition for the Basketball Tournament. We are in no condition to make any but the weakest claims for greatness, perhaps. When our equipois is complete, we may be able to offer the game.

Friend Nelson has been taking more physical education. He no longer scrambles around under a tree for? Just the same, but he is more interested in being there. The rest of the team was out as usual. Nelson paints and lays around all day. Be kind to your friends, and they will be kind to you.

Joe Bangor tells how it feels to be lazy. After just one day of idleness he has become.much more trustworthy and harder working. He says that he feels like the roadway. There seems to be a great rumble of protest from the students on the campus who have not yet offed anything, and we know by casually informing me that I am one of them. If I ever do some work, I shall have a chance to prove my worth.
