Fighting Bate Team Holds Tufts to 13-0

Cross-Country Prospects Good

Varity and Frosh Teams are Stepping Along through football requires the livelihood of athletes at this time, the cross-country race also requires the athletes to be in top form. The race was held on the University of Maine campus, and the frosty weather added to the difficulty of the course. The race was won by University of Maine, with Bates finishing in second place.

Bobkittens Hold Bridge ton Eleven to Scoreless Tie

Four years ago, Bobkittens and Burlington College played a scoreless tie game, and this year, the game was repeated. The game was held on the University of Maine campus, and the outcome was uncertain until the very last minute.

Bobcats Leave for Boston to Meet B. U. Terriers

Husky Wiggleson Hope to upset Predictions for B. U. Bates Team in First Class Condition for Fray

Sixteenth Year

Interscholastic

Planned

Intervention in Caribbean

Subject for Debate in

High Schools

For the sixteenth year, the Bates Intercollegiate League is open to underclassmen. The question, as decided by the League members last June, is: "Resolved, that the United States government refuses to provide military assistance to the Caribbean countries as a means of controlling their internal affairs." This year, the League is made up of six schools, including Bates, and is expected to draw many participants.

Bobcats Leave for Boston to Meet B. U. Terriers

Husky Wiggleson Hope to upset Predictions for B. U. Bates Team in First Class Condition for Fray

Sixteenth Year

Interscholastic

Planned

Intervention in Caribbean

Subject for Debate in

High Schools

For the sixteenth year, the Bates Intercollegiate League is open to underclassmen. The question, as decided by the League members last June, is: "Resolved, that the United States government refuses to provide military assistance to the Caribbean countries as a means of controlling their internal affairs." This year, the League is made up of six schools, including Bates, and is expected to draw many participants.

Bobcats Leave for Boston to Meet B. U. Terriers

Husky Wiggleson Hope to upset Predictions for B. U. Bates Team in First Class Condition for Fray

Sixteenth Year

Interscholastic

Planned

Intervention in Caribbean

Subject for Debate in

High Schools

For the sixteenth year, the Bates Intercollegiate League is open to underclassmen. The question, as decided by the League members last June, is: "Resolved, that the United States government refuses to provide military assistance to the Caribbean countries as a means of controlling their internal affairs." This year, the League is made up of six schools, including Bates, and is expected to draw many participants.

Bobcats Leave for Boston to Meet B. U. Terriers

Husky Wiggleson Hope to upset Predictions for B. U. Bates Team in First Class Condition for Fray

Sixteenth Year

Interscholastic

Planned

Intervention in Caribbean

Subject for Debate in

High Schools

For the sixteenth year, the Bates Intercollegiate League is open to underclassmen. The question, as decided by the League members last June, is: "Resolved, that the United States government refuses to provide military assistance to the Caribbean countries as a means of controlling their internal affairs." This year, the League is made up of six schools, including Bates, and is expected to draw many participants.

Bobcats Leave for Boston to Meet B. U. Terriers

Husky Wiggleson Hope to upset Predictions for B. U. Bates Team in First Class Condition for Fray

Sixteenth Year

Interscholastic

Planned

Intervention in Caribbean

Subject for Debate in

High Schools

For the sixteenth year, the Bates Intercollegiate League is open to underclassmen. The question, as decided by the League members last June, is: "Resolved, that the United States government refuses to provide military assistance to the Caribbean countries as a means of controlling their internal affairs." This year, the League is made up of six schools, including Bates, and is expected to draw many participants.

Bobcats Leave for Boston to Meet B. U. Terriers

Husky Wiggleson Hope to upset Predictions for B. U. Bates Team in First Class Condition for Fray
WHAT ABOUT YOUR MOTIVES?

The members of the Student board feel a keen sense of pleasure and satisfaction in the knowledge that, because of the generosity and co-operation of the whole board, this and all subsequent issues of the Student will be sent to a hundred preparatory schools throughout this section of the country. It is our earnest hope, and will be our persistent endeavor, to convey through the pages of this weekly, a true picture of the life and activities of the campus for we are convinced that any man or woman who glimpses that life will recognize the important part which its counterpart could play in his or her future development and to the pride which we feel in referring to Bates as our Alma Mater.

We shall not try to analyze that pride, but we should like to consider a few of the reasons why we are here, and why others come to make each entering class larger than the last. There are many motives. Some of them are good; an equal, perhaps even a greater number are bad.

If we take the whole college simply because Beth Jones, who lives next door, or Philip Smith across the street, and it just seems the thing to do, we have not started on the four year trail which we are to follow. We should consider whether any last persists, or that, yet very consideration is the star that guides many men and women to college each year.

Perhaps it is not this star alone which is to be blamed for all the false starts in college life. Blame should go, rather, to the constellation which includes not only the star of imitation, but as well those of rivalry, of social ambition, and of desire to escape for four more years of the Approved Society; but it may well be called a common element through the haze of our own desires, so that it never appears the same to any two in that one gorgeous detail—the white collar itself. It is useless to anyone to point out to such a man that there are as many holders of degrees among the unemployed, to say nothing of the manual laborer, as any man or woman who glimpses that life will recognize the important part which its counterpart could play in his or her future development and to the pride which we feel in referring to Bates as our Alma Mater.

We shall not try to analyze that pride, but we should like to consider a few of the reasons why we are here, and why others come to make each entering class larger than the last. There are many motives. Some of them are good; an equal, perhaps even a greater number are bad.

If we take the whole college simply because Beth Jones, who lives next door, or Philip Smith across the street, and it just seems the thing to do, we have not started on the four year trail which we are to follow. We should consider whether any last persists, or that, yet very consideration is the star that guides many men and women to college each year.

Perhaps it is not this star alone which is to be blamed for all the false starts in college life. Blame should go, rather, to the constellation which includes not only the star of imitation, but as well those of rivalry, of social ambition, and of desire to escape for four more years of the Approved Society; but it may well be called a common element through the haze of our own desires, so that it never appears the same to any two in that one gorgeous detail—the white collar itself. It is useless to anyone to point out to such a man that there are as many holders of degrees among the unemployed, to say nothing of the manual laborer, as any man or woman who glimpses that life will recognize the important part which its counterpart could play in his or her future development and to the pride which we feel in referring to Bates as our Alma Mater.

We shall not try to analyze that pride, but we should like to consider a few of the reasons why we are here, and why others come to make each entering class larger than the last. There are many motives. Some of them are good; an equal, perhaps even a greater number are bad.

If we take the whole college simply because Beth Jones, who lives next door, or Philip Smith across the street, and it just seems the thing to do, we have not started on the four year trail which we are to follow. We should consider whether any last persists, or that, yet very consideration is the star that guides many men and women to college each year.

Perhaps it is not this star alone which is to be blamed for all the false starts in college life. Blame should go, rather, to the constellation which includes not only the star of imitation, but as well those of rivalry, of social ambition, and of desire to escape for four more years of the Approved Society; but it may well be called a common element through the haze of our own desires, so that it never appears the same to any two in that one gorgeous detail—the white collar itself. It is useless to anyone to point out to such a man that there are as many holders of degrees among the unemployed, to say nothing of the manual laborer, as any man or woman who glimpses that life will recognize the important part which its counterpart could play in his or her future development and to the pride which we feel in referring to Bates as our Alma Mater.

We shall not try to analyze that pride, but we should like to consider a few of the reasons why we are here, and why others come to make each entering class larger than the last. There are many motives. Some of them are good; an equal, perhaps even a greater number are bad.

If we take the whole college simply because Beth Jones, who lives next door, or Philip Smith across the street, and it just seems the thing to do, we have not started on the four year trail which we are to follow. We should consider whether any last persists, or that, yet very consideration is the star that guides many men and women to college each year.

Perhaps it is not this star alone which is to be blamed for all the false starts in college life. Blame should go, rather, to the constellation which includes not only the star of imitation, but as well those of rivalry, of social ambition, and of desire to escape for four more years of the Approved Society; but it may well be called a common element through the haze of our own desires, so that it never appears the same to any two in that one gorgeous detail—the white collar itself. It is useless to anyone to point out to such a man that there are as many holders of degrees among the unemployed, to say nothing of the manual laborer, as any man or woman who glimpses that life will recognize the important part which its counterpart could play in his or her future development and to the pride which we feel in referring to Bates as our Alma Mater.

We shall not try to analyze that pride, but we should like to consider a few of the reasons why we are here, and why others come to make each entering class larger than the last. There are many motives. Some of them are good; an equal, perhaps even a greater number are bad.

If we take the whole college simply because Beth Jones, who lives next door, or Philip Smith across the street, and it just seems the thing to do, we have not started on the four year trail which we are to follow. We should consider whether any last persists, or that, yet very consideration is the star that guides many men and women to college each year.

Perhaps it is not this star alone which is to be blamed for all the false starts in college life. Blame should go, rather, to the constellation which includes not only the star of imitation, but as well those of rivalry, of social ambition, and of desire to escape for four more years of the Approved Society; but it may well be called a common element through the haze of our own desires, so that it never appears the same to any two in that one gorgeous detail—the white collar itself. It is useless to anyone to point out to such a man that there are as many holders of degrees among the unemployed, to say nothing of the manual laborer, as any man or woman who glimpses that life will recognize the important part which its counterpart could play in his or her future development and to the pride which we feel in referring to Bates as our Alma Mater.

We shall not try to analyze that pride, but we should like to consider a few of the reasons why we are here, and why others come to make each entering class larger than the last. There are many motives. Some of them are good; an equal, perhaps even a greater number are bad.

If we take the whole college simply because Beth Jones, who lives next door, or Philip Smith across the street, and it just seems the thing to do, we have not started on the four year trail which we are to follow. We should consider whether any last persists, or that, yet very consideration is the star that guides many men and women to college each year.

Perhaps it is not this star alone which is to be blamed for all the false starts in college life. Blame should go, rather, to the constellation which includes not only the star of imitation, but as well those of rivalry, of social ambition, and of desire to escape for four more years of the Approved Society; but it may well be called a common element through the haze of our own desires, so that it never appears the same to any two in that one gorgeous detail—the white collar itself. It is useless to anyone to point out to such a man that there are as many holders of degrees among the unemployed, to say nothing of the manual laborer, as any man or woman who glimpses that life will recognize the important part which its counterpart could play in his or her future development and to the pride which we feel in referring to Bates as our Alma Mater.

We shall not try to analyze that pride, but we should like to consider a few of the reasons why we are here, and why others come to make each entering class larger than the last. There are many motives. Some of them are good; an equal, perhaps even a greater number are bad.

If we take the whole college simply because Beth Jones, who lives next door, or Philip Smith across the street, and it just seems the thing to do, we have not started on the four year trail which we are to follow. We should consider whether any last persists, or that, yet very consideration is the star that guides many men and women to college each year.
W. A. A. Soon to Elect Fall Sports Captain

The election of candidates for the various sports was discussed at the W. A. A. meeting Monday evening. About 30 students were present and the following committee was elected to take care of nominations:

Dr. Edmond A. Lebel, Ruth Barrell, L. E. Flanders, Arthur L. C. Nilson, Miss Booth.

Dr. Lebel who is in charge of the sports in the college will call the meeting to order, after which the nominations will be taken and the candidates will make speeches. The voting will be taken at the next meeting which will be held next Wednesday night. The candidates include a number of veterans and a number of new faces.

Dr. Lebel said he was ready to make the meeting a success if the students wanted it and he urged the students to get ready for it.

A History of Hathorn with Diggresions

By Sylvia Nute, ’31

Not the birth of a nation, but the birth of a new building—Hathorn—came on Monday. November 18, 1868, when the cornerstone was laid. There was music and celebration in Lewiston. At last the dream, Maine State University of which the college itself. The second floor was completely rebuilt, so that these and various other changes were made into the one big math room as we have it now.

At this time the building was enjoying a special discount given to college students. DENTAL SURGEON

Dr. Edmond A. Lebel, D.M.D.

For GOOD CLOTHES and MENDINGS—Ladies and Gents clean and unfinished. The stacks curled away from the necessary exclusion of others. The majority is seldom wrong.

For six years Hathorn was used as a hotel, and later as a storehouse for the Student Forum of Boston University. It may seem incongruous to us now that the Lambda Alpha girls now call the place a home in back, and Mrs. Roberta says that the place was a home in front, and Mrs. Roberta says that the place was a home in front.

The third floor, too, has seen many changes. Another change that has been made into the one big math room as we have it now. The students have had their work cut out to make a success of it all and the students have made it a success. The students have shown it to the others, and the students have made it a success. The students have shown it to the others, and the students have made it a success. The students have shown it to the others, and the students have made it a success. The students have shown it to the others, and the students have made it a success. The students have shown it to the others, and the students have made it a success. The students have shown it to the others, and the students have made it a success. The students have shown it to the others, and the students have made it a success. The students have shown it to the others, and...
LEWISTON TRUST COMPANY
25 Lisbon St. Lewiston, Maine

President, L. L. Pratt
Vice-President, L. A. S. M. Wilson
Secretary-Treasurer, F. W. Brown
Assistant Secretary-Treasurer, E. L. Cleveland

A M E R I C A N  B U L L E T I N
LAW ENFORCING A C R E  PUBLIC

A Day During the War:
July 12, 1918

Helen Hope of the Society of St. Andrew, served in the American Red Cross. She was a native of Lewiston and a graduate of Bates College. Her work was in the field of public health, and she was a member of the American Red Cross staff in France.

Mrs. Hope was a leader in community work in Lewiston, and she was active in various organizations, including the American Red Cross, the League of Women Voters, and the American Red Cross League. She was also a member of the Bates College Alumni Association, and she was aJessie

Mrs. Hope was a popular speaker on community and social issues. She was known for her ability to reach a wide audience, and she was a skilled communicator. She was a leader in women's issues, and she was a strong advocate for women's rights.

Mrs. Hope was married to Mr. Hope and they had three children. She died in 1945 after a long illness. She was deeply missed by her family and friends, and she will be remembered for her contributions to the community. She was a true pioneer in the field of women's issues, and she will be remembered for her leadership and inspiration.

Mrs. Hope was a member of the Bates College Alumni Association, and she was active in various organizations, including the American Red Cross, the League of Women Voters, and the American Red Cross League. She was also a member of the Bates College Alumni
Association, and she was aJessie

Mrs. Hope was a popular speaker on community and social issues. She was known for her ability to reach a wide
audience, and she was a skilled communicator. She was a leader in women's issues, and she was a strong
advocate for women's rights.

Mrs. Hope was married to Mr. Hope and they had three children. She died in 1945
after a long illness. She was deeply missed
by her family and friends, and she will be remembered for her contributions to the community. She was a true pioneer in the field of women's issues, and she will be remembered for her leadership and inspiration.