Thanksgiving

There will be many controversial accounts which will claim the origin of Thanksgiving as they reach tomorrow for the Thanksgiving holiday.

To many Thanksgiving is a day of friends coming together and enjoying a sumptuous meal. It is a day of giving thanks, a day of thoughtfulness. But many people feel that those are the only two things Thanksgiving is good for. The fact is that Thanksgiving is a day of friendship, a day of giving, a day of remembering.

There is still another Thanksgiving, one that is observed in spiritual terms. It is a day of giving thanks for the gifts of the Spirit. It is a day of remembering the saints who have gone before us, and the grace that was given to them.

But let us not forget the first Thanksgiving. It was a day of friendship, a day of giving, a day of remembering. Let us remember that Thanksgiving is a day of friendship, a day of giving, a day of remembering.

Criticalism of Student Editorials

On a number of occasions we have been informed that certain of our annual friends were displeased with material appearing in the editorial columns of this paper. This information, however, very rarely is conveyed directly to our ears, but comes through division chieftains in which it gains strength and momentum as that which is desired. The need for a change in the present policy of editorial writing is, therefore, by no means to be minimized. The interested parties are, of course, the students themselves, and the faculty. It is hoped that some of these matters may be resolved by mutual agreement in the near future.

There are in the world of students a number of chieftains who are disposed to say, "If these are the matters happening in the school, our life is not worth living." It is said that this is true of students at all colleges, and that it is the nature of the teaching profession to instill in students the idea that their life is not worth living. This is not true. The teaching profession is not responsible for the condition of the world. It is the students themselves who are responsible for their condition.

But the teaching profession can do something to help. It can do something to help by encouraging students to think for themselves, to read, to reflect, to question, to inquire, to think critically. It is the teaching profession's responsibility to help students to develop the ability to think critically.

How Do We Eat?

The college common is, for sure not to be in the campus, has undergone some changes for the better. The food that is served there is better than before. This is due to the efforts of the students who are now in charge of the common. They have worked hard to improve the food that is served there.

The college common is an excellent example of how students can work together to improve their environment. It shows that students can make a difference in their own lives and in the lives of others. It also shows that students can be successful in making changes in the world around them.

Nicholas Murray Butler

In the minds of the American people, Dr. Butler may stand for liberalism and the repeal of the 18th Amendment, but on the other side of his liberalism he has stood for the idea that the college common should be a place where students can come together to enjoy good food and good company. And in this he has been successful.

The college common is a place where students can come together to enjoy good food and good company. It is a place where they can forget the stresses of the world and just relax and enjoy each other's company. It is a place where they can, in Dr. Butler's words, "come together to enjoy the common good."

Chesterfields are Milder

Chesterfields Taste Better

As smokers become more experienced, they demand milder cigarettes. Chesterfields are milder. Their mildness is just as much a feature as the beauty of their package.

The tobacco is mild to begin with. Patient aging and roasting make them milder still. And Chesterfields contain just the right amount of Turkish—not too much—carefully blended and cross-blended with ripe, potted Domestic tobaccos.

Chesterfields are milder. They taste better. That's why "They Satisfy."

No raw tobacco in Luckies
—that's why they're so mild

We buy the finest, the very finest tobacco in all the world—but that does not explain why folks everywhere regard Lucky Strike as the mildest cigarette. The fact is, we never overlook the truth that "Nature in the Raw is seldom Mild"—so these fine tobaccos, after proper aging and mellowing, are then given the benefit of that Lucky Strike purifying process, described by the word—"It's toasted". That's why folks in every city, town and hamlet say that Luckies are such mild cigarettes.
