Rutgers Set to Host Debate on "The Secret,""Glory to the Trinity,""Morning"

By Donald Webber

In view of the fact that within the past few weeks there has been a great deal of controversy over the "Holbrook and the Little Symphony," it seemed wise to take advantage of the opportunity afforded by the inclusion of the "Morning" in the current debate program.

The "Morning" is a play by Schumann, which was published in 1830. It is a satirical comedy about the life of a successful lawyer, who, in the course of his profession, comes to have a number of intimate relationships with women. The play is noted for its biting wit and clever dialogue.

The "Morning" was selected for the debate program because it provides an excellent opportunity to discuss the relationship between the law and women, and to examine the role of the lawyer in society.

In the debate, the "Morning" will be presented as a case study, with each team taking a different perspective on the relationship between the law and women. The "Morning" will be used as a platform to explore the ways in which the law has influenced the lives of women, and to examine the role of the lawyer in creating and enforcing these laws.

It is an interesting challenge to try to craft a debate on "The Secret,""Glory to the Trinity,""Morning" in a way that is both educational and entertaining. I hope that the "Morning" will provide a lively and thought-provoking experience for both the participants and the audience.

Not like others...

Even so...you can say Chesterfield are "not like others"

No two people in the world look alike...not alike. So it is with tobacco...just like folks. No two leaves are the same. And the same with cigarettes...no two brands are alike.

Furthermore, not only are the tobacco different, but the way the tobaccos are handled is different. This, you can understand. You know just as well as we do that no two manufacturers use the same kind of tobacco, or blend them the same, or mix them together in the same manner.

We do everything that science knows and that money can buy to make Chesterfield as good a cigarette as can be made. Even so...you can say Chesterfield are "not like others".
