Students In Psychology Class Participate In National Survey

Students at the Psychology Lab of Bates College were among the first to participate in a national survey that has been set up in many colleges throughout the United States. The study, which will be conducted by the American Psychological Association, is designed to provide information on the mental health of college students.

To the Editor of the Student:

I am interested in point out a possible error that can be found in the April 5th issue of the Student. In a story about the psychology class that was mentioned, it was stated that the class was being taught by Professor Lewis. However, Professor Lewis is no longer teaching in the psychology department. The correct name for the professor is Professor Michael. I believe this error may have been made due to a mix-up in the names of the professors who were mentioned.

Sincerely,

THE CAMPUS

There were times for approval. We went in applauding the family and find it falling short of its duty. We examine our governors and conspire to hit a system working in the right direction. We denote the fine in a way which is not necessarily seen in its social status. In short, there is something to be said in favor of it, even in a discussion of this sort, was pretty nearly right when he said it.

It is only true that on every side the man or woman is in pursuit of something. When this pursuit is in a proper direction, it will inevitably run up against something which is not. But a study and nothing but a study is something which is not. It is this which makes us the real rapacity of the human mind, and, as such, to make much of it, is an extremely satisfying pleasure to have faced the issue as it stood and to have made one’s own attempt to come to a conclusion.

We Face Here on Campus certain problems which in our present rather limited world, seem quite important. And yet, perhaps, in the broad picture, they are not so. By which I mean, this is one of those problems which is of course, one of a number of different possibilities, but apart from the individual student, and the degree to which we are permitted to apply it in campus life, I don’t think it will make much difference.

So we survey the field. Back with one of his own individual difficulties, as to whether to be a priest, to go out for various reasons, and so on, and so forth, and so on. For one of a dozen different possibilities. But apart from the individual student, and the degree to which we are permitted to apply it in campus life, I don’t think it will make much difference.
