As some 100 senators are about to graduate from the Bates junior college schools or to complete the results of a survey recently completed by the Institute of Public Opinion for the University of Minnesota, the continuation of employment prospects for the 1927 graduating classes are in the best years in seven.

The most important factor in determining the future of men and women, according to the survey, will be whether or not they have been successful in finding work. The survey shows that the number of men and women who have been successful in finding work will be influenced by the extent to which the economy is in a depression.

The results of the survey, which cover the period from 1920 to 1927, show that the percentage of men and women who have been successful in finding work has increased steadily since 1920. This trend is expected to continue through 1927, with the exception of a slight dip in 1925 due to the depression.

The survey also shows that the percentage of men and women who have been successful in finding work is higher than the percentage of men and women who have been unsuccessful in finding work. This is due to the fact that the economy has been in a depression for the past few years, and the number of men and women who have been successful in finding work has increased as a result.

In conclusion, the survey shows that the future of men and women is dependent on the extent to which the economy is in a depression. The percentage of men and women who have been successful in finding work is expected to continue to increase through 1927.
