Pres. Roosevelt's Statement on Japan Also Draws Remarks

Attitude of State Dept. Toward Japan Also Drawn Remarks

Professors Urge Neutrality

The recent declaration of President Roosevelt and State Department, and the careful wording of the State Department on the fall of Singapore, do not, in my judgment, indicate any abandonment of the policy of neutrality, nor is there any indication in the foreign policy of the United States that we are stepping into any general war.

President Roosevelt's Chicago address, and State Department, was, in effect, a secret generalization in America, and the demonstration was the present state of the public mood in the United States.

The College and the Drunk

The College and the Drunk

The campus and the drunk. In a frat party, this is likely to mean that the campus is providing a place to drink and the drunk is there to take advantage of it. But in the modern college, the drunk is a complex problem, with many factors involved. The college has a responsibility to its students to provide an environment that is conducive to learning and growth, and the drunk can be a distraction from these goals. At the same time, the drunk has a personal responsibility to make good choices and not to interfere with the rights of others.

In this week's edition of "The College and the Drunk," we will explore some of the issues involved in this complex relationship. We will look at the history of alcohol use on college campuses, the role of the college in controlling this use, and the responsibilities of the drunk. We will also discuss some of the ways in which the college and the drunk can work together to create a positive environment for everyone.
