Two students at Bates学院 participate in a debate club. The club is interested in discussions, petitions, and protests to oppose any condition that might lead to war. The ability to show mass demonstration and bring the younger generation to the attention of the government is seen as crucial.

The League of Nations is discussed as an example of a spontaneous united group. It is this power which the collegiate generation currently lacks, and which is needed to prevent war.

The armistice of 1918 is mentioned as a time when the United States was barely capable of making its own decisions, informally and legally. And the younger generation, it is argued, needs to learn how to make decisions and take responsibility.

The debate club is seen as a way to inform the younger generation about the importance of decision-making and the need to prevent war. The club is interested in discussing and protesting against any condition that might lead to war, and is seen as a crucial tool in preventing future conflicts.

The club is also interested in discussions about the League of Nations, and the importance of spontaneous united groups in preventing war.

Jim Reid Is Scholastic As Well As Athletic

By James Taylor '39

Winning men, Mark, mean many valuable and exquisitely polished qualities of which this city's finest can boast. One such is Jim Reid, who as outstanding member at Bates has distinctly contributed a great deal to the success of the football team. He is a born football player with an intellectual background, having received his A.B. in June, and he is a member of the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity. He has worn the Garnet in football, basketball, and track. In his senior year, he has been president of the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, and has been a member of the track team. His outside jobs, too, have been as a Chemistry tutor and a Biology tutor.

Jim Reid has had many opportunities to showcase his talent, and he has never missed a chance. In his junior year, he played against Bowdoin and Colby, and in his senior year, he played against Colby and Bowdoin again.

Jim Reid has been a welcome addition to the football team, and he has made many contributions to its success. His leadership and intelligence have been invaluable assets to the team, and he has proven to be a valuable player.

Spectacular Frosh Beat New Hampton 36-6

By Dick Hibberd '39
