Hymn Number 75

The two seventy-fifth anniversary of Bates College was celebrated during this past week in the most appropriate place—on campus. Three-quarters of a century ago the Chapel, either in the Little Theatre or in the Chapel of this year were received by the student body proves the acceptance and cooperation of the undergraduates themselves. It is our hope that all will be able to continue this cooperation.

The undergraduates themselves, it has been said, have been the cause for the decay of the Chapel service. That this charge falls short of the truth is clear from the fact, as has been mentioned above, the fact that the undergraduates have shown that they will continue to support the Chapel, even if they are not attending it. The undergraduates themselves are responsible for the success and failure of the Chapel service.

In order to understand the success and failure of the Chapel service, it is necessary to consider the reasons for its success and failure. The reasons for its success are as follows:

1. The undergraduates themselves have shown that they will continue to support the Chapel, even if they are not attending it. The undergraduates themselves are responsible for the success and failure of the Chapel service.

2. The Chapel service is a good service, and the undergraduates themselves have shown that they will continue to support it. The reasons for its failure are as follows:

1. The undergraduates themselves have not shown that they will continue to support the Chapel, even if they are not attending it. The undergraduates themselves are responsible for the success and failure of the Chapel service.

The reasons for its failure are as follows:

1. The undergraduates themselves have shown that they will not continue to support the Chapel, even if they are not attending it. The undergraduates themselves are responsible for the success and failure of the Chapel service.
