TWO

American Campuses Optimistic About Country's Neutrality

With Europe's war now involving more than 10,000,000 soldiers in a month, the American student polls conducted by the Student Opinion Surveys of America, which were made before the Red Army began its activities, showed more than 75 per cent of the student population felt that the United States could stay out of the conflict.

These polls were made before the Red Army began its activities, and before the general public had been given the facts and figures about the progress of the war in Europe.

The results of the student polls made before the Red Army began its activities are surprising, even to those who are used to the American student polls conducted by the Student Opinion Surveys of America.

The poll was conducted among the student body of a large university in the United States, and the results were as follows:

- 75 per cent of the students felt that the United States could stay out of the conflict.
- 20 per cent of the students felt that the United States should enter the war.
- 5 per cent of the students had no opinion.

These results are surprising, even to those who are used to the American student polls conducted by the Student Opinion Surveys of America.
