Campus Workers Keep College Functioning, Orderly, Smoothly

By Mitchell A. Pollack '44

With the color of burning leaves and the excitement of the forthcoming homecoming dance, it may seem like an opportune time to give serious consideration to the role the people play in maintaining democracy. It is important to remember that it is not enough to merely vote; this right carries with it a responsibility to understand the issues, to make an informed decision, and to vote with integrity.

Campus workers, who ensure the daily operations of the college, are the backbone of the institution. Their contributions are essential to the functioning of the college, and they play a significant role in maintaining democracy by ensuring that the rights of all students are upheld.

King of all is Robert MacDonald, who has been around campus for fifty years. Every year, he is known as "Joe" to all the students. His presence is felt throughout the campus, from the Commons to the classrooms. Joe is a beloved figure on campus, and his dedication to maintaining order and safety is unmatched.

Central to the college's functioning is the janitorial staff, who work tirelessly to keep the campus clean and comfortable. Among them are the janitors who work in the Chase Hall and the custodians who maintain the dormitories.

Campus life is dependent on the work of these individuals, who ensure that the college operates smoothly and that the rights of all students are protected.

From Bates News, Oct. 13, 1943

Ewart Edmund Turner, who spent ten years in Germany as pastor of a church, is undertaking an investigation of Nazi penetration of Latin America. Only recently returned from his trip to Central and South America, Turner was presented to the delegates from the various colleges and towns where he spoke. Turner's researches in Latin America have given much food for thought even to the most skeptical. They strongly emphasize the need for continued American intervention in the New World, counteracting Fascist attempts to colonize this vast area.
