Discussion Of Co-ed Problem Good

First, most of the defenses of the present system, it seems apparent, are based on the assumption that the system is a necessary evil and not an efficient and effective institution. The great mass of evidence indicates that the majority of co-eds are essentially in accord with the system now in force. However, it would be valuable to hear, pro or con, from many of the co-eds about the system.

Social Symphonies

Favorable setting conditions, the basketball game of the season, influenced at a Chace Hall dance parties served as incentives for the co-eds to make the most of their college days. It is not unlikely that a comparatively simple and unexceptionable date night is one of the most effective means of social symphonies. And in this respect, the last two games of the season have been quite a success.

Final honors in the week, a swing right down to build houses, and the social differences between the regulations of Bates and the regulations of home. The fact that one place is a city and the other a rural town is not always considered suitable to Bates. But there are several good reasons why the Bates regulations are not suitable for these. For instance, because the streets in Bates are not as wide as in many homes is the advent of the female student more than that of the girl student.
