Dual Responsibility

"For the present term work as students, faculty, and administration is on the campus." These were spoken, in Chapel some time ago, as significant. They mean essentially, we must achieve education as far as is possible. We must achieve education in this country with a generation capable of shouldering responsibility in the peace and the war. The danger that is our responsibility. In many ways that are as against this danger of being hemmed in by narrow points ... to be critical of those who are taking an active course in First Aid, Home Nursing, Nurses Aid, and other rational and remunerative courses. The statement above be taken too literally—that we confine ourselves only to the study of moral and intellectual purposes. Eleven States Contribute To College's Coed Population

by Virginia Johnson

Where do you come from, my pretty girl? To answer this we would have to go back to the early days of Bates College, to the time when Bates College was the only women's college in the New England area. There are now 118 college students, of whom 114 are women. Bates students come from a large number of states, and the states are as follows:

- New York (11 students)
- Pennsylvania (10 students)
- Massachusetts (9 students)
- New Jersey (8 students)
- Connecticut (7 students)
- Vermont (6 students)
- Rhode Island (5 students)
- Maine (4 students)
- Delaware (3 students)
- New Hampshire (3 students)

This is a significant fact, for it indicates the wide diversity of the student body at Bates College. The diversity of the student body is an important aspect of the school's mission, which is to provide a comprehensive education for all students, regardless of their background. The diversity of the student body is also an important aspect of Bates College's commitment to social equity and inclusion. The school is committed to providing a welcoming and inclusive environment for all students, and to promoting diversity and inclusion as central values of the school. It is also important to note that the school is committed to providing a comprehensive education for all students, regardless of their background. This is an important aspect of the school's mission, and the school is committed to providing a comprehensive education for all students, regardless of their background. This is an important aspect of the school's mission, and the school is committed to providing a comprehensive education for all students, regardless of their background.
