Student Envoy Sees Reactioneer Trend

By Valerie Saling '43

The student envoy's trip to England has given rise to a wave of reactive thinking. Most striking evidence of the government's change of attitude in Vietnam is the Secretary of State's recent visit to the University of Maryland last Thursday. Wolpe spoke definitely earlier in the war for American collaboration in a post-war international organization. In last week's address, he reviewed what he characterized as "having to do with the American's foreign policy."

"This is not only too late for the foreign policy of the people of the United States. . . . only should be determined by the standpoint from the Vietnam people which is their real and practical self-interest. Our foreign policy will serve to uphold the moral law of the community instead of the moral law of the community.

The speech, devoid of references to the plan of world cooperation which was advocated last winter, was explained by Worthington Miner in his article this week: "A recognition of the mounting tide of world events which Vietnam observers have noted during fighting, and which were emphasized in the South Pacific, is the present situation of the part in Vietnam this latter part of November."

Other indications of a reaction trend in Washington political pulses: útil. Only Friday the State Department acknowledged receiving a letter from Donald Riehl, maker, however, the best information which the country can get, to represent the government in the United States; another example of the new wave of action, was the appointment by Army and Navy Intelligence to make an overseas survey and by the National Advisory Board of the seven-month's course are made without regard to regular seasons or geographical distribution, only the best candidates being chosen regardless of college or place of residence. No alternates are appointed. Candidates are judged on the basis of scholastic standing, qualities of character, ability, and leadership, and necessity in public service.

Weed Ginn Win Frosh Speaking Honors

In the freshmen class debates held last night at Chase Hall, Donald E. Williams and Robert S. Weigandt, freshmen in the 25th and 26th of this month. It was arranged that they consult the main campus for the seven months' course and will be handled entirely by members of the Play Production Group.

Schaeffer Reveals Robinson Play Plan

The first production of this semester is scheduled to be presented next Sunday, March 25th and 26th of this month. It will be an adaptation of "The Whirl of the World" by Robert Wood Frost, and "The Whirl of the World" by Robert Frost. The best individual speaker to be selected as first prize, and the additional prize is a $15 award.
After last week's small-size issue had been distributed, the editorial and business staffs of the STUDENT were approached as to the why's and wherefore's of reducing the size of the paper. This measure had to be taken for reasons which can fit under two headings: economic necessity and manpower shortage.

The economic aspect concerns the inability to put together a seven-column regular size issue at the current rate of advertising in the face of present and expected rising costs in paper and help as well as shortage of newsprint. The second purpose is to erase the financial deficit in which the paper is now running enough to insure those staff members who were working for salaries at least a reasonable amount. The second purpose is to erase the financial deficit in which the paper is now running enough to insure those staff members who were working for salaries at least a reasonable amount.

The manpower shortage concerns the number and quality of the reporitorial and make-up staff. A glance at the mast-head will show that neither the Managing nor News Editors are at present in college. Since this work must be carried on and since of the two sophomores who would have naturally succeeded to these positions, one had already been gone over a week while the other expects to be in the service by February 20th, we have neither the numerical personnel nor the time to readjust the staff to this situation. For these reasons, although we do not like to take this step, we have to institute the policy of keeping to this smaller size.

One thing that could help the situation, however, would be to secure the volunteer services of men, with or without journalistic experience, who do not face immediate induction into the service and of more women of higher caliber willing to assume the responsibilities and privileges formerly reserved to men reporters. Unless immediate application by such people to the editors is forthcoming, the STUDENT, which serves a very definite and useful purpose as a means of student opinion besides being a source of information, may have to be curtailed even further owing to lack of adequate personnel.

Northeastern's balance which netted a total of 100 points for the winners, Joe Carey of Bowdoin and "Flinch" Abernethy of Northeastern, and four points for the Bates quintet in last Saturday's meet, biggest triangular meet held at the Bates campus and won by Northeastern. The handiest every event paid off in a big way. The final count showed 91-65 points for Bowdoin, and only 115s for Hay Thompson's Bates forces.

Bates was in the lead in seven events, four to Bowdoin, and a lone one to Bates. Joe Carey, which has been partially blotted out of the tail. (Continued on page four)

Athletic Dept. Releases
Intrasquad Manual

Despite the expected shortage of manpower on the Bates campus this week, a basketball quintet made up in the intrasquad manual according to Athletic Booster Minute Mores. Basketball is a community sport and may be a league organized in hockey, volleyball, tennis, as well as basketball if there is a great enough demand.

A first year intrasquad basketball match was made a big hit by the freshmen in last week's practice sessions when the young sophomore sensation put us through our paces. Thinks these over a mere game.
