William Perkins Wins Navy Citation

William Perkins, '43 of Nantasket, Massachusetts, was called to the Philadelphia Naval Yard by Capt. Admiral L. J. Kaufmann to receive a citation on last Tuesday afternoon in the chapel on Thursday. His citation for work at surface of the Third Air. The award was made for action on July 30, 1946, in which, incidentally, he was seriously wounded.

THE BATES STUDENT, JANUARY 15, 1947

Focus on the important things. The monkey has a starting berth. He has demonstrated his ability to pick rebounds off the backboards, and his passing set up many tallies. Bert Hammond, quiet, efficient type of play, is perhaps not fully appreciated by the fans. His high score in the Colby game and, once his hook passes are "on", he is a constant threat. Angelo Anastasi has put in sterling work in his guard position under the defenders basket. He is another excellent-guard of great proficiency.

The Bobcats have an advantage over most other teams, as they have five steady scorers. If one of them is "off" the others can make up for it. Some teams depend on one or two men for most of their points, and if one of "is" the team is the worst. It is the team approach certainly is going to give Maine a good showing.

In Junior-Senior Speaking

The trials for the annual Junior-Senior Speaking Contest were held in the chapel on last Thursday and Friday, with Professors Robinson, Minna Frank, and Professor Whitbeck as judges. The trials for the safety of less experienced. Later he instructed at the World's Fair ski school at Mammoth. He is a native of Hinsdale, Vt., in the heart of the winter sports region. He now resides in Aspen.
