Delegates From Seventy-one Nations Meet, Discuss Youth and The World

(First of a series by Bill Strang, Director of Bates World Youth.)

We are now in the early evaluation of the Second World Congress of Christian Youth. We have begun under similar premises the Second Conference of Christian Students in Oslo, where the World Student Christian Federation has its home, and it will take months for those who have been there to digest the implications of Oslo and the long-range interpretations of the Second World Congress, movement, and the re-interpretations and re-visions on youth experiences.

Our days were strenuous at Oslo. We faced the same fundamentals that we have met in every other conference. We met in a great city of a small country. We met in a city of many different ages, colors, theological beliefs, educational backgrounds, and different customs, traditions, and systems, but Oslo accomplished what it set out to do: to prepare a cadre of more educated, more informed church leaders, to present commissions. These leaders are thrown on the world stage, from the interpretations of the Second World Congress of Christian Students, to the Second Conference. The leaders who have been there have been given a challenge and they now need to be inspired by the world church movement in their countries.

We must be prepared for the coming year of these leaders. We must be prepared for the coming year of these leaders. We must be prepared to give them the best possible guidance to go into the world and to understand the world. We must be prepared to give them the best possible guidance to go into the world and to understand the world. We must be prepared to give them the best possible guidance to go into the world and to understand the world. We must be prepared to give them the best possible guidance to go into the world and to understand the world.
