The Bates Student (FOUNDED IN 1873)

By Dave Tilson

Mr. Stringfellow in his recent article, displayed an unhistorical approach in assessing Senator Taft's foreign policy. He presented a narrative of Taft's career as an isolated, 'negative' figure, and asserted that Taft's foreign policy statements have a reminiscent ring to readers of Mr. Stringfellow's recent essay.

The article in The Student, on the other hand, presents a more nuanced view. It highlights Taft's role in the formation of the League of Nations and his efforts to promote international cooperation. The essay argues that Taft's approach to foreign policy was influenced by his belief in the importance of international law and his efforts to promote peace and stability.

The current debate on foreign policy issues, such as the recent conflicts in the Middle East, provides a backdrop for this discussion. The Student's essay offers a perspective that balances the negative assessment with an understanding of the complexity of Taft's approach and the historical context in which he operated.

Readers are encouraged to engage with these perspectives and to consider the historical and contemporary implications of Taft's foreign policy.

Several conferences with Coach Thompson, the managers, and members of the Frosh, convinced us that we are not ready enough men are not fit for this season. There are several fast ends that can be counted on to be up there near the top, but the lack of depth is what hurts. The immediate need is for variation for the coming spring season. The thrill of last fall's Bates-Maine football game were relived on the gym floor in the form of movies and music. According to the Baxter, the movies were "wild" and "mean," and the music was "bluesy." Two groups of students, one comprised of men and the other of women, competed against each other. The men triumphed, defeating the women by a score of 13-2. The music was provided by the piano and saxophone duet of Edith Routier and Mary H. Stone. The Baxter described the performance as "surprisingly good." The Bates-On-The-Air program was conducted by the campus radio. The producers and technicians were the students who were members of the Campus Radio Committee. The program was broadcast weekly and was named "Bates-On-The-Air." The producers and technicians were dressed for the occasion. The program was broadcast "for the entertainment of the students and the general public." The broadcast was "entitled," and the students were "very pleased" with the results. The program was "very popular" among the students.
